World and the first of these lessons was to know fear. For all of the smallest of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows it is necessary to know when to be afraid. If they are not afraid at the right time they will not live long. Now, Whitefoot's four children, never having been out in the Great World didn't know what fear was. So Whitefoot hid them where they could watch him and ten he played shout where he knew Hooty the Owl would be sure to see him. Hooty did see him and tried to catch him, and the four little Mice saw it all. Then fear, terrible fear, catered their hearts. Never again would they hear or see Hooty the Owl without shivering with fear.

This was just what Whitefoot wanted. When it was safe for him to do so he went back to them and teld them all about Hooty the Owl. Whenever he is about," said Whitefoot, "you must keep perfectly still. As long as you do not move he will not see you. He knows that, so he will try to make you move by frightening you. He will hoot with that terrible voice of his and then he will listen with his wonderful ears. If you so much as rustle a leaf he will hear and will be over there in an instant. So, when you hear Hooty the Owl, sit still, no matter how much you want to riun. Sti perfectly still. Thus only may you see he hout? "asked one of the little Mice. Whitefoot nodded. There is one," said he, "who is even worse. It is Shadow the Weasel'." "Should we sit perfectly still when he is about?" inquired another. "That depends on whether he suspects you are about?" replied Whitefoot nodded. There is one," said he, "who is even worse. It is Shadow the Weasel hunts with his noze. If he finds your seen he is about?" inquired another. "That depends on whether he suspects you are about?" replied whitefoot in the first your and he will not want to riun. Sti perfectly still when he is about?" inquired another. "That depends on whether he suspects you are about?" replied Whitefoot in the first your seen he will not a whole of the little Mice. Whitefoot nodded. "There is one," as all it should.
